

Pininfarina and Cible present “e-Solex”: the electric Solex of the 21st century

Paris – Cible Group, the French company who bought up the Solex brand from Magneti Marelli, and Pininfarina are pleased to present in world debut the new “e-Solex”, a re-elaboration of the Solex 3800 in a modern and environmentally-friendly key.

Pininfarina, even keeping the silhouette of the legendary moped, has realized a new version characterized by an actual, fresh and amusing look. Our company, showing its ability to work as a 360° supplier for all the transportation means – not only automotive – offered its know how to create the product image, the design and the prototyping.

The interventions concerned especially the brakes (now disc brakes), the engine (electric) and the comfort (front suspensions).

The “e-Solex” can reach the speed of 35 Km/h, the weight is less than 35 kg and it will have around 30 km of functioning autonomy. An additional battery, to increase – if necessary – the coverable distance, will be supplied as optional.

Its innovative propulsion (electric engine), will allow to travel in total safety and complete respect of environment, both from the acoustic and atmospheric point of view.

The prototype “e-Solex”, realized by Pininfarina, will be shown at the “International two wheel show” in Paris (October 1 – 9).
